Are low-skilled immigration and coresidence substitutes? Evidence from Secure Communities

This paper studies the impact of Secure Communities (SC), an immigration enforcement program that removed a large number of non-citizens, on the living arrangements of elderly U.S.-born individuals. Exploiting spatial and temporal variation in the implementation of SC, I estimate a difference-in-differences model with location and time fixed effects. The findings indicate that SC increased the likelihood of coresidence among U.S.-born elderly. Additionally, there is suggestive evidence indicating an increase in coresidence of the elderly with unemployed individuals following SC. Empirical tests suggest that the increased price of household services due to the reduction of immigrants' labor supply is the key mechanism generating these effects.

Immigration Enforcement and Health Insurance: Evidence from Secure Communities (with Marina Lovchikova)

– Program Chair Award for the Best Health Equity Paper at the 13th American Society of Health Economists Conference (ASHEcon 2024)

This paper examines whether the implementation of Secure Communities (SC), an immigration enforcement program that removed a large number of non-citizens, affected health insurance enrollment of Hispanic U.S. citizens who themselves are not subject to the policy. Exploiting spatial and temporal variation in the implementation of SC, we estimate triple-difference and event study models. Our findings reveal that SC significantly reduced Medicaid enrollment by 1.9 percentage points and increased the uninsured rate by 2.6 percentage points among likely eligible Hispanic citizens, with no significant effects observed for non-Hispanics. These effects are pronounced in the initial two years post-implementation, suggesting a temporary but substantial “chilling effect.” Exploring the mechanism, we find that the effect of SC is driven by information transmission within families and communities, consistent with literature on network effects. For policy goals of closing a gap in health insurance coverage and take-up of social safety net programs among Hispanic, our results highlight a crucial role of communities in mitigating the unintended effects of anti-immigrant policies.
